The realm of architecture is multidisciplinary and draws input from various domains such as art, traditional crafts, history, sociology, anthropology and culture to name a few. Research in Architecture is gaining prominence and significance, in the current developments, pertaining to both the pedagogy and professional application, in the realm of the built environment. It offers an exciting opportunity for architects to explore. Although architecture does have infinite research possibilities and offers a wide scope for inter disciplinary research, it has yet not been explored extensively. Research is a systematic, vigorous investigation of a situation or problem in order to generate new knowledge or validate existing knowledge. It is a pivot for many emerging questions and plays a critical role for the furtherance of knowledge for the discipline and profession of architecture, as in all professions. The methods of research in architecture are undergoing continuous changes. Traditional documented methodology is being infused with new trends to make the process of research more exciting and productive. This opens up new vistas in data collection and research methods and helps the researcher in extrapolating the findings to the real world of practice.

The objective of this five day training program is to demystify the process of research. It will focus on methodology, tools and techniques of research in architecture. It will highlight the steps involved in identification of a research area, making a research proposal and define the processes for taking the research work to culmination with effective clues to report writing. The training program will include presentations, discussions and group work by participants.
