Preamble

The earliest written work on the subject of Architecture dates back to 1st Century, explored by Vitruvius in his work entitled "De architecture". Defining Architecture and teaching Architecture to the interested students are two diverse domains. An effort will be made in this workshop to bridge the gap between architecture as a profession and architecture as subject of study. Studying about architecture may not lead to becoming a skilled architect. To this very problem, the Architectural Design which is focal subject to becoming architects needs a clear strategy and pedagogy to enthuse students to experiment and try allowed paths. These paths followed by different schools of thought are discussed and made into achievable progress in Architectural Design teaching.

Workshop is dedicated to be of practical approach and relevant complexity in teaching skills needed to achieve the outcomes of syllabus. Most of syllabus deals with simple tasks and leading to complexities in teaching skills needed to achieve the outcomes of syllabus. Most of syllabus deals with simple tasks and leading to complexities in analysis and synthesis in design

Workshop focusses on how to frame problems in increasing complexity over the years of Architectural Teaching.
